

Overview of SNAP Policy: Washington, D.C.'s adoption of flexibilities under Broad-Based Categorical Eligibility (BBCE) for SNAP receipt has expanded eligibility for food stamps to more families. Importantly, extending the gross income limit to 200% FPL effectively reduces benefit cliffs for working parents as they earn higher incomes. Since the District eliminated its asset test, families applying for SNAP can retain their savings and still receive nutritional assistance – an important determinant for economic mobility.

Washington, D.C. also provides all families with a 12-month recertification period, requires parents to report income changes only when income rises above eligibility limits, and offers online services for its initial application, change reporting, and renewal of SNAP benefits. These services all ease administrative burdens that can limit families from accessing nutritional support even when they are eligible, as seen in other states. The District has also fully lifted the lifetime ban on eligibility for those convicted of drug-related felonies.

By providing families that are losing access to TANF cash assistance with transitional SNAP benefit assistance for several months, the District offers consistent support to low-income families through a critical period of acute need.

Assessment of SNAP Policy: Treating child support payments to non-household members as income exclusions rather than deductions would expand SNAP eligibility to more families. Additionally, using District funds to provide SNAP to immigrant households with children who are ineligible under federal regulations would benefit young children's development and support economic security, particularly for newly-arrived families.¹
